

CALL WITH MEDICAID INFRASTRUCTURE GRANT PROGRAM (MIG) GRANTEES

April 12, 2012

- Enhanced Employment Supports: potentially a useful resource.
- MIGs are “a good thing” at the state level: providing states with flexibility.
- Work incentives—do not appear to be getting people off of government programs; maybe consider offering supports without incentives.
- Lead entity: more flexibility with IHEs (with regard to contracts, community involvement), instead of state agencies.
- Workforce representatives should be involved.
- It is proving difficult to gain access to students through the schools.
- A larger age range might tell us more information.
- Working with Parent Resource Centers—explain work incentives—perhaps use this as a means of changing the culture of not working.
- Focus on work activity in teen years, rather than reduction in benefits—maybe they can retain benefits while working.
 - Working in teen years is a great indicator of long-term success. Both working as early as possible and working while in school are good things
 - Maybe look at the use of work incentives
