Narrator

Lu remembers an early conversation with Shannon.

L: What do you like to do for fun?
S: I like to go shopping with my friends.
L: Do you like shopping?
S: Yes, I do.
L: Why?
S: I can go to the mall. I like to look at new clothes.
L: I don’t like shopping. What else do you like to do?
S: I like to draw and paint. I want to be an artist. This is my favorite drawing.
L: Wow! They are beautiful. Are you an artist?
S: Thanks. I want to be an artist. Do you like to draw?
L: No, I don’t.
S: Why not?
L: My pictures are not pretty. I am not a good artist.
S: You can learn to draw. You should practice every day.
L: What should I draw?
S: You should draw a simple picture. You should read a book about drawing.
L: What should I read?
S: Why don’t you read this one? It is a good book.

GRAMMAR LINKS

why / why not?
"Why" and "not" are both adverbs. Adverbs are words that answer the questions When? Where? Why? In what manner? To what extent?

"Why?" can be used by itself as a question in response to another person's statement. When used in such cases, "Why?" means, "For what reason, cause or purpose?" In the story, when Shannon tells Lu that she likes shopping, he responds by asking, "Why?" He wants to know the reasons Shannon likes to shop. "Why (do you like to shop)?"

When "not" is used with "why," the meaning changes. "Not" is a word that expresses the idea of "no." Shannon asks Lu if he likes to draw. He says that he does not like to draw. When Shannon replies, "Why not?" she wants to know the reasons Lu does not like to draw: "Why (do you) not (like to draw)?" Shannon also could ask Lu, "Why don't you (like to draw)?"

It's important to know that "why not?" also has another meaning. Often people say, "Why not?" or "Sure, why not?" to express approval of what's been suggested or proposed. If you like to shop, and someone asks if you want to go shopping with her, you could say, "Yes, I do (want to go shopping)" or "Why not (go shopping)?" Both answers let the other person know that you want to go shopping.

What should I . . .
"Should" is a helping verb. Helping verbs, also called auxiliary verbs, help in the formation of other verbs. "Should" has five different meanings, but in this case it is used to express obligation, duty, propriety or desirability.

In the story, Lu asks Shannon, “What should I draw?” “What should I read?” As you can see, in questions that contain “should,” another verb (an action) must follow the subject (in this case, I) to complete the sentence. In both questions, without the verbs draw and read, Shannon would not know what Lu needs to do, so she would not be able to answer his questions.

<tr>
<td>The phrase “Why don't you?” has two different meanings. It could be used to make a suggestion, as Shannon does in the story. Lu asks Shannon what he should read. By saying to Lu, “Why don't you read this one?” Shannon is suggesting that Lu read a certain book. As you can see, a verb (in this case, read) must follow “you” to complete the question.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The second meaning for the phrase “Why don't you?” is not a suggestion. When “do not” is used with “why,” the meaning changes. “Not” is a word that expresses the idea of “no.” Shannon asks Lu if he likes to draw. He says that he does not like to draw. When Shannon replies, “Why not?” she wants to know the reasons Lu does not like to draw: Shannon also could ask Lu, “Why don't you (like to draw)?” If you took apart that phrase, another way to say it is “Why do you not like to draw?”</td>

long answer to the question, “Do you like to eat?”

The important thing to know in answering a question is not whether to use a short answer or a long answer, but rather which type of verb to use. Questions usually address feelings or actions. If someone asks you a question about how you feel about something, your answer needs to include a linking verb.

Linking verbs usually are the various forms of “to be” (am, is, are, was, were, be, been, being). They are used to link or connect a subject with a predicate adjective, predicate noun or predicate pronoun. “To be” means, among other things, “to exist” or “a state of being.”

“I am” or “Yes, I am” often means that you confirm your state of being or feeling. In the story, Teacher Mrs. Ho asks Lu if he is hungry. Hungry is an adjective that describes the feeling of having hunger. Lu uses the short answer, “Yes, I am.” Lu is letting Teacher Ho know that he is hungry. He also could have said, “Yes, I am hungry.”

If someone asks you a question about an action, you need to respond with a verb that conveys that action. For example, “do” is the first person transitive verb that means “to perform or carry out an action.”

“Yes, I do” means that you take an action on something. In the story, Lu asks Teacher Ho if she likes funny movies. Like is an intransitive verb that means “to enjoy.” Teacher Ho replies, “Yes, I do.” She also could have replied, “Yes, I do like funny movies.”

A long answer includes most or all of the question that was asked. “No, I don’t like to shop” is an example of a long answer to the question, “Do you like to shop?”

The important thing to know in answering a question is not whether to use a short answer or a long answer, but rather which type of verb to use. Questions usually address feelings or actions. If someone asks you a question about how you feel about something, your answer needs to include a linking verb.

Linking verbs usually are the various forms of “to be” (am, is, are, was, were, be, been, being). They are used to link or connect a subject with a predicate adjective, predicate noun or predicate pronoun. “To be” means, among other things, “to exist” or “a state of being.”

“Are” is a linking verb. Linking verbs usually are the various forms of “to be” (am, is, are, was, were, be, been, being). They are used to link or connect a subject with a predicate adjective, predicate noun or predicate pronoun. “To be” means, among other things, “to exist” or “a state of being.”

When a linking verb is placed in front of the subject rather than after it, it signals that what follows is a question rather than a statement. For example, “Are you a soccer player?” is a question. If you take “are” and put it after “you,” it becomes a statement: “You are a soccer player.”
CULTURE LINKS

shopping
American cities and suburbs have huge shopping centers that are called “malls.” A mall houses many retail stores, restaurants and even movie theaters. Many teenagers spend their free time with friends at the mall. There are maps at main entrances to help customers locate stores and get around. There are also customer service counters that provide more personable services including lost-and-found, gift-wrapping, etc.

Drawing and painting
Art is a part of all American students curriculum from elementary school through high school. Almost all American high schools require at least one class in art or music. There are even high schools public and private dedicated to a fine arts focus of study. These programs may include, painting, drawing, creative writing, computer animation, graphic design, and many others.

Do you like music?
Music is nice.

User answers question. If correct, advance to next scene.
If incorrect 1st time, gets a “try again”
If incorrect 2nd time, program auto answers the question sending the user back to practice. User will not advance on the map.

Closing Scene
Lu

Do you like music?

Deshawn

Yes, I do. The Squiggles are my favorite band.

Lu

Thanks for helping me.
Lu smiles at the user.

BE THE COACH 2
Scene opens with Lu and Deshawn talking in the cafeteria. Medium shot both characters. After they finish the conversation, Lu turns to the camera and nods in appreciation.

Deshawn

Lu

I like to ride my bike. Do you like to ride bikes?

Deshawn

Yes I do. Do you want to ride after school?

Lu

okay.
Lu turns and nods to the user.
What American Teens Do With Free Time

American teens enjoy a fair amount of free time. The homework from school isn’t excessive, perhaps only taking a few hours a night. Many teens don’t work after school, and as a result, many play in organized sports. What they choose to do with their other free time varies with their interests.

Talking on the telephone ranks high on their lists of activities. When not on the phone, many like to spend time on their personal computers. Taking advantage of the Instant Messaging functions, they can engage in many conversations at the same time. They enjoy video games and looking up articles on their favorite musicians. When alone, they like to listen to music and/or read books and magazines.

If they have hobbies, such as photography or skateboarding, they will devote free time to those. Some teens will spend hours trying to perfect a new skateboard stunt to impress their friends.

When not on the computer, you will find many teens congregating at the local shopping mall, which is filled with many stores, movie theaters, and most importantly, a food court. The food court contains stalls that sell all types of food. American teens love to eat!

The shopping mall gives them a central location to meet. It provides a place to talk with friends face-to-face and share the events of their day, gossip about friends who aren’t there, and talk about their plans for later.

Popular hobbies in the US

Hobbies are popular in the United States, and many of these involve collecting items related to a particular interest. Let’s just look at two: baseball and NASCAR auto racing.

Baseball cards – Baseball trading cards have been popular in the United States since the mid-1800s. They usually have a photograph of a baseball player on the front, and the player’s statistics on the back. In modern times, they were packaged with chewing gum and sold by a company called Topps, whose 1952 issue is one of the most sought after by collectors today. Topps enjoyed a virtual monopoly until 1980, when a court ruled that other companies could sell cards too, but without chewing gum. Now you can find cards produced by many companies in shops devoted entirely to trading cards. They’re fun to collect and swap, but be careful to not bend the corners!

NASCAR – Following World War II, stock car racing enjoyed a tremendous rise in popularity. A need for standardization prompted the creation of the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing (NASCAR). The sport has come a long way since then, with over 6 million people attending the 36 major racing events each year and 20 to 30 million viewers watching each event on television. Fans enjoy collecting everything from miniature cars, to key rings, to hat pins, T-shirts, Christmas ornaments, and anything else you can think of that has the number of a favorite driver emblazoned on it. A recent check of eBay found over 33,600 listings for items related to NASCAR.

WRITING ASSESSMENT

Lu is sitting by himself. He wants to write down 3 questions to ask other students. Will you help him?

| Robot | Lu needs help writing 3 questions to ask students in the cafeteria. Will you help him? Use the words below to write these three questions in English; (questions display in Chinese only)
What do you eat for breakfast?
What do you like to study?
Do you like funny movies?
[In addition to all the words above there are 4 distracters] are why not how | Chinese translations of instructions are available to the user. This looks and works very much like the email activity from the Lost Dog prototype.
1st time fail: User hears first feedback in English with Chinese text only translation displaying on screen: "No, try again."
2nd time fail: User hears 2nd feedback: "It’s this one."
After 2nd fail and auto answer displays, advance the student to the next scene. |

LISTENING ASSESSMENT – Lu makes a new friend.

BACKGROUND: Lu, Deshawn, and another student are talking in the cafeteria.

answer this question.
[The text below is in Chinese.]
Click on these three buttons to find the one that says in English, “Yes, I do. I love pop music.”
[3 audio buttons appear without text]

- No, I don’t. I love to play football.
- Yes, I do. I love pop music.
- Yes, I do. And I love to dance.

SPEAKING ASSESSMENT - Your turn
Same cafeteria location. Lu, Deshawn, and another student Lu doesn’t know yet. There are 8 total student responses required.

Conversation

Gizmo
Lu wants to know about Deshawn’s friend but he is shy. Will you help him by asking the other student a few questions? Click on the Deshawn’s friend to begin.

Deshawn’s friend
Hi.

Gizmo
You should say Hello, what is your name? (1)

Deshawn’s friend
My name is Trevor.

Gizmo
Now, ask him this “what do you like to do for fun?” (2)

Trevor
I like to skateboard.

Gizmo
Now find out what he likes to study. (3)

Student must form question on their own, acceptable answers would be “What do you like to study?”

Trevor
I like to study math. What do you like to study?

Gizmo:
Now you should answer Trevor’s question. Tell him the subject you like most, start by saying “I like to study ...” (4)

Student must form question on their own, acceptable answers would be “I like to study (any subject) or simply (subject) would be an acceptable answer.

Gizmo
Now ask him “Do you like sports?”(5)

Trevor
Yes. I like tennis.

Gizmo
Now ask, “Do you eat breakfast?”(6)

Trevor
Yes, I do.

Gizmo
Now say “What do you eat for breakfast?”(7)

Trevor
I eat cereal for breakfast. What do you eat for breakfast?

Gizmo
Answer Trevor’s question, here’s a hint for you “I eat _____ for breakfast.” (8)

Gizmo
That was terrific. Lu is very happy he is making new friends. Click on this souvenir photo to save in your scrapbook and end this lesson.

User clicks screen and is sent back to the backpack to begin the next episode. A photo and an email letter from Lu saying thanks for helping appears in the scrapbook.
