

Suggested Resources

The following list is provided to help support the sharing of resources postsecondary institutions may use to inform and tailor their campus sexual assault training and prevention efforts. The list references some of the many tools, trainings, research, and publications currently available publically, and is provided for information purposes only. We encourage you to also explore additional resources included at www.notalone.gov/schools/.

Campus Sexual Violence Resource List provided by the National Sexual Violence Resource Center refers to campus safety resources in areas such as primary prevention on campus, campus policy information, statistics, alcohol use and sexual violence, as well as resources for administrators, student activists, and law enforcement. <http://www.nsvrc.org/saam/campus-resource-list>

Clery Center for Security On Campus provides a number of webinars and toolkits institutions can use to build or strengthen campus safety initiatives focused on dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking; sexual violence; emergency preparedness; and fire safety. <http://clerycenter.org/sites/default/files/NCSAM2014.html>

National Center for Campus Public Safety (NCCPS) has been charged with developing a Trauma-Informed Sexual Assault Investigations and Adjudications training program for campus officials. NCCPS also includes an online database of campus safety resources, including white papers, government-funded studies, videos, webinars, and more, available at: <http://nccpsafety.org/resources/library/>

National Center on Safe and Supportive Learning Environments (NCSSLE) resources include key research, technical assistance information, webinars for colleges and universities, and a training module on teen dating violence prevention. The Center is also charged with developing a new training on trauma-sensitive practices for colleges and universities. <https://safesupportivelearning.ed.gov/violence-against-young-women-and-girls>

Sexual Assault Response Team Toolkit is a collection of resources, including practices, tools and examples from communities across the country, to support coordinated efforts to formalize, expand on, or evaluate community responses to sexual violence. <http://ovc.ncjrs.gov/sartkit/>

End Violence Against Women International's OnLine Training Institute provides more than a dozen online training resources for professionals, specifically focused on guiding improvements in the criminal justice and community response to violence against women. Modules cover topics such as the critical role of victim advocacy and victim advocates and developing a coordinated and sustained response through sexual assault response and resource teams in rural communities. <http://www.evawintl.org/onlinetraining.aspx>
